This public art project is headed up by The Chicago Lighthouse, a nonprofit that provides job training and support for people who are blind, visually impaired or disabled. The artists behind the lighthouses, Jeff Hanson, is visually impaired, but his artistic vision is acute.

"What inspired the pieces are family trips like to the Met, or going to the Mediterranean... then you would take pictures and this would be a landscape or countryside," he said.

The exhibit aims to raise awareness for adults with disabilities who want opportunities to shine. It will remain on display through August 11.
